

committed suicide. It was the lenst she could do, write a comedy that can hold its own with the best imported or translated. In the hands of a duffer company, "A Write Lie" would be Sanscrit to the Rendals and their talented company of players it constitutes a flewless performance that is as delicate and beautiful as anything that has ever been rendered on our stage. There is no describing the fine spinning of Mrs. Kendal in the part she played; an exclamation that was only the fragment of a syllable brought her applause in one passage. In another her audience was captivated by a glance that lasted only for a second. How she does these things passes all understanding, but that she does do them and makes her meaning clear is instantly realized by such people who go to see this class of entertainment. The ingenuity of a faultimed would be sorely taxed last evening, whether he took the leaders for his victims or addressed himself to the humblest performer. In his sphere Tempesa's valet was as artistic as any of them. Mr. Kendal as Sir. John Molyneaux, as in each of the other parts he has played during his engagement, was most finished in levery style and aroused admiration at the surface of the stage. Mrs. We finally company we have a well aware that this unstinted adulation may sound fulsome, but in our weak way we desire to do full justice to every actor or actress that appears in our midst, and we only fall short of giving Mr. Kendal his due by reason of our lack of ability to give proper expression te our appreciation.

After seeing three difficult plays performed by the Kendal company, we have the first three is asy one thing that is elaimed for the Kendals more than is another, it is their personal respectability. We are told by their representation. If there is asy one thing that is elaimed for the Kendals mother; it is their personal respectability. We are told by their representation.

Sol Smith Russell appeared in Cincinnati for the first time in two years lately, and did the banner business of the season there. Nat C. Goodwin will produce his new play, written for him by Henry Guy Carleton, next February, at the Hollis street theatre, Boston.

The New York Herald a few Sundays ago, ran more than thirteen columns in its theatrical department, James Gordon Bennett evidently knows what the people like to rend.

The completion and opening of the new Grand theatre is one of the events that it will shortly be our pleasant juty to announce. duty to announce.

"Jacinia," Louis Beaudet's new play, was presented in Philadelphia Nov. 18, and pronounced by the press and public a most doleful and sad affair.

Stuart Robson has made a hit as Lucien Briscard in "The Interloper" or "The Feet of Venus," It will probably be added to his repertory permanently.
